Philosophy and Approach: The world is made of relationships; with friends, partners, family, and with ourselves. As a therapist I try to put our working relationship first and let therapeutic technique follow. I am trained in a variety of therapy approaches, with Emotionally Focused Therapy, Narrative Therapy, and Solution-Focused Therapy forming a flexible base to work from. I tend to ask a lot of questions, and my goal is for you to leave my office with a more complete understanding of yourself, your relationship, and your life. I am welcoming to those in all relationship structures and have personal experience working in sexually and relationally diverse communities.

Formal Education: Portland State University B.A. Arts and Letters 2014, Lewis & Clark College M.A. Marriage, Couple, Family Therapy 2023

Major Coursework Description: My coursework at Lewis and Clark centered in training in relational counseling, systemic frameworks and social justice perspectives. I received additional training on working with domestic violence during my internship at Allies in Change.

Fees: My fee is your cash fees are $100-150 per visit and that you accept several insurance plans.

Good faith estimate: on average I see clients for 25 sessions; which would be $2500 - 3750 for relational counseling or individual counseling without insurance. Costs with insurance may vary.

See the back of this page for your client bill of rights.
